Education

[BA, Communications:
New Media](#)

[September 2005 - September
2008](#)

An intensive course equipped me with specialist skills in interactive design, production and strategy.

The course is for students who want to design, build or manage the interactive products of the future.

Prospective students are to be passionate about design, the web and new technologies.

The understanding of digital media gained by mixing practice and theory-based teaching made me highly sought after within the new media and communications industries and beyond.

Experience

Web designer and developer

[Self employed, Worldwide
January 2006 - Present](#)

I work and play as an established freelance designer specialising in front-end website design and development. I have over 3 years freelance experience and with professional agencies.

I intentionally look to work on new projects that innovate and extend my conceptual thinking about design and development. I am aware how important this work ethic is for professional longevity.

I am equally confident working in both design and development circles. This, interchangeably, means I can keep my work fresh and adapt my output to a broad range of projects and client demands. My approach also helps me nurture project management processes and accounting skills including sourcing and outsourcing, contractual drafting, budget negotiation, and relationships with clients – both on and offline.

I enjoy simplistic form with specific focus on web usability and accessibility. Focusing on this allows me to work quickly and efficiently, which transcends to my users' experience.

Presently my specific areas of interest lie in web usability, interface design, and encouraging more functional interactive features into web standards; giving more thought to user experience and narrative. I'm also intrigued by brand perception, and tailoring brand strategy accordingly using social media.
